magnum Club. It is composed of Ernest Albert, Alexander Bower, Oliver Bennett Grover, Howard Giles, Victor Higgins, Walter Ufer and Robert Vonnich. The show lasts until April 2.

Allusions to the sculptures by Mrs. Clare Sheridan which have recently been brought to this country have been concentrated a good deal upon her busts of Lenine and Trotsky. The conspicuity of those individuals has not unnaturally made talk about their portraits. But this artist's work needs no adventitious aids in order to attract attention. It is highly interesting in itself. In the first place, it is full of life. Mrs. Sheridan appears to have a quick grasp upon character and the ability to say what she has to say in a direct, energetic manner. She is capable of a certain bravura, as in her bust of Zinoviev, but the picturesqueness of that head is less effective than is the quiet intensity of feeling which characterizes most of her bronzes. The busts of Marquis Casati and Admiral Sir Rudolf Bentinck are her finest achievements, busts in which picturesqueness is left to take care of itself and all the artist's ability is poured into subtleties of expression. She shows some charming statuettes, studies tingling with human truth, like the portrait of H. G. Wells, and one or two heads of a rather romantic order. The polychromatic "Mademoiselle X" is an unfortunate affair, forced and unlovely. Mrs. Sheridan is safest when she gives play to nothing but a simple sincerity. This triumphs over what is unpolished in her technique.

The pastels by Mr. Abraham Neumann, an artist of Polish origin, which are on view at the Mussmann gallery, are captivating performances. He knows his evanescent medium so well that he can handle it forcibly without hurting the lighter element in its charm. He knows, especially, how to draw, firmly and broadly. His landscapes have good color in them, sentiment, and modest but workmanlike design. The villages and fields here presented have a welcome solidity. The picturesque old houses rest on veritable earth. It is all honest craftsmanship, with genuine feeling in it.

John W. Beatty, director of fine arts at Carnegie Institute, in Pittsburgh, announces that the annual international exhibition there will open on April 28. The jury meets on April 7 to select the paintings and award the three prizes. This jury, of which Mr. Beatty is president, is composed also of William Nicholson and George Clausen, from England, and the Americans, Charles H. Woodbury, Bruce Crane, Edward W. Redfield, Leonard Ochtman, Daniel Garber, George W. Bellows, Emil Carlson and Charles W. Hawthorne.

In addition to the triple exhibition at the Macbeth gallery, traversed in another column, there may be seen at that place a collection of recent work by Miss Gladys Thayer, to which we will return.

Mr. Ernest Lawson has ten new landscapes at the Daniel gallery, interesting illustrations of a very personal and attractive method. It is a method which has suffered some changes in recent years. There was a time when Mr. Lawson's surfaces had a peculiar charm. This has been modified. It is dryer to-day than it once was—dryer with a diminution of beauty. But the modification of his surfaces has not affected this painter's feeling for nature disadvantageously. On the contrary, he has gained in force what he has lost in sensuous quality. His masses are more broadly handled. His forms are more eloquently stated. Note, for example, the tree forms in the "Birch Woods." The group of slender trunks is exquisitely synthesized. There are a number of good pictures in the show, but head and shoulders above all the rest is the striking composition called "Mill in Vermont." It is a noble impression, and it is particularly impressive in design.

The Wildenstein gallery announces an exhibition of decorative portraits by Mr. Abram Poole. Paintings by Mr. Wharton Harris Escherick are at the Babcock gallery, and at the Folsom gallery there is a collection of winter landscapes painted in Norway by Mr. William H. Singer. The Schwartz gallery is making an exhibition of pastels by Mr. Hamilton King, studies of pretty types, gracefully drawn. The paintings at the Touchstone gallery just now are by Mr. Jaime E. Carret.

The examples of El Greco in the exhibition of old Spanish paintings which was held at the Ehrlich gallery not long ago, made an exceptional impression. They have, therefore, been brought into view again, the four hanging in the front room for a time. It was a good idea thus to show them. The Scriptural composition which dominates the group is a fine picture, and the different portraits of saints are, if anything, more characteristic and beautiful.

The annual exhibition made by members of the Whitney Studio Club is now open at their rooms, and will last until April 20. It consists of both paintings and sculptures.

A religious picture, "The Sixth Hour," by Nator Honti, may be seen at the gallery in the Hotel Majestic. It depicts the scene on Calvary just preceding the crucifixion, with Christ subjected to the jeers of the multitude. There is little warmth of color in the painting. The various characters are well realized, however, and show appreciation of types and their emotions. The artist is a native of Central Europe, schooled in Paris. There he conceived the idea of this canvas, but he completed the work in New York, taking his models from the East Side.

An After-Easter Clearance
Men's and Young Men's
SUITS
At $19.50

THE TWO WEEKS previous to Easter proved an unusually busy period in the Loeser Men's Store; one of the busiest times of the year—and of course it has left our stocks somewhat disorganized. There is a great accumulation of small lots and incomplete lines. Good storekeeping demands a clearance of them all.

So, irrespective of their regular prices we have reduced the price of every Suit to $19.50.

About 300 Suits are involved, men's Suits in both conservative and radical styles, and young men's Suits in a wide variety of effects.

It is the lowest price we have quoted for garments of such high character in several years, and we fully expect a hearty response to this announcement; so to make certain of profiting by this sale we would suggest that little time be lost in attending.

1,800 Starched Cuff Shirts
Regular $2 Value : Special at $1.45

Although many men prefer the Starched Cuff Shirt and most men want it for occasional wear, yet it is a difficult matter to find the Starched Cuff Shirt in most stores.

Here is your opportunity to get a supply at a saving price! They are the product of a leading manufacturer and are made and finished in first-class style.

All are made over the Loeser "Large-Body" patterns and so they will be comfortable and economical in the wearing. The material used is a fine count, fast color percale, with neat stripe patterns over light grounds. They are all FULL washed and hand ironed. Neckbands are beaded to prevent a rough edge chafing the neck. All have a box center plait down front. Stripes are properly matched inside and outside of cuffs. An extraordinary value!
